Allegations of abuses in the determination of eligibility for the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System have been brought to MAG's attention. MAG is deeply concerned that the integrity of the retirement system remain untarnished. A preliminary inquiry into this subject revealed that the Agency's Inspector General's Office has completed a comprehensive study of the history of the selection system, which concludes that the system needs revamping. However, the Deputy Inspector General was reluctant to release the report to MAG because it is apparently controversial and contentious, and because it has not yet been considered by the Management Committee.

MAG is pleased that this serious issue has been the subject of an extensive study, and we do not wish to needlessly duplicate the IG's work. However, we remain interested in the inviolateness of CIARDS, and would appreciate your notifying MAG when the issue is considered by the Management Committee, and of its disposition. At that time we may request additional information on the IG's report and the Management Committee's findings.
